Heirloom Candles ~ At A Glance

Founded                      2001 by Karen and Hank Schumacher

Headquarters              Husser, Louisiana near New Orleans

Candles                      Hand-poured candles that are 100 percent pure and natural, containing only soy oil, an all-cotton wick and skin-safe fragrance. No petroleum-based dyes or paraffin wax.

Dipping a finger into a regular candle wax pool—even one made with a “vegetable oil blend,” will coat it with a shell or crust. An Heirloom Candles oil pool will not harden and will leave only clear soy oil on the finger, ready to be massaged into the skin.

Sustainability              Heirloom Candles are produced domestically using sustainable and environmentally-friendly practices.

They are made from the biodegradable, renewable resources of soybeans and cotton (wicks). Its recyclable glass containers are sourced domestically. Packaging is made with 50 percent or more post-consumer waste and no additional filler, and labels are printed with soy ink.

Since Heirloom Candles are proudly made in the U.S., the products’ environmental footprint is reduced by eliminating intercontinental shipping. The company is as passionate about supporting American farmers, American businesses and Mother Nature as it is about candles.

Why Soy?                      Soybeans are an agricultural product grown by American farmers. They are a renewable resource, and grow in abundance in Louisiana and other states.

Paraffin, a common element in most candles, is derived from petroleum. When burned, it releases toxins and soot into the air. Soy candles burn cleaner and are completely non-toxic and non-carcinogenic. They also burn at a lower temperature, which means a safer product for moisturizing and a longer-lasting candle.
